Preparing Our Kids For The Innovation Era

Co-Authored by

Tony Wagner and Ted Dintersmith

Years from now, historians will point to this period as an inflection point for the United States. They'll write about how the core structure of the global economy changed in the blink of an eye. The creative force of innovation erased millions and millions of routine jobs and eroded the power of large, bureaucratic organizations. As those economic dinosaurs died off, they were replaced by countless opportunities for the innovative, for the creative, for the nimble. And this was a time when our nation struggled to preserve a functioning democracy, when we were challenged by the fracturing of news sources, ever more complex policy issues, and citizens (including elected officials) lacking basic skills needed to deal with complex challenges. When our government was brought to a stand still by gridlock, and no progress was made to solve essential crises. Wagner and Dintersmith,58.
